Commencements

Quo Vadis

QUO VADIS. When translated from Latin, it means wither goest thou: This is the decision that each of us will have to make as we leave Bloomfield College. As we go out into the world, we will attempt to apply what we have learned. It is the application of that knowledge which determines whether we make a meaningful contribution.

During the first two hundred years of our country's history, many Americans have attempted to form a Utopian society. Over one-hundred-thousand people have established small colonies in an effort to create their own Utopian civilizations. To date, we have no serious evidence of success for any of these groups. What is Utopia? We might define it as any visionary system or state of ideal perfection. Obviously, Utopia can have different meanings to different people. To the teacher, it means a society without ignorance; to the nurse, a world where everyone realizes health potential; to the political scientist, a perfect form of government; for the economist, the highest standard of living for all.

One day, a man died. While his fate was being, he had an opportunity to see both heaven and hell. When he looked at hell, he was amazed to see a banquet table. The table was covered with the most appetizing foods he had ever seen. The people sitting at the table were thin and emaciated. When he looked more closely, he saw that their arms were restrained by boards. These people were starving because they could not bend their elbows to feed themselves. Then he went to heaven. There he saw a similar scene: the banquet table with delicious foods; the people around the table had the same restraints that prevented them from feeding themselves. However, they looked well nourished. Then, he noticed that here the people were feeding one another. This is an example to people working within the system they had to help one another.

Ralph Waldo Emerson agreed that the way to reach Utopia was not to form a new colony, but rather to work within the existing framework of society. This is our opportunity and our challenge. The future is what we make it. 1976 marks a turning point in our country's history. It also marks a turning point in our lives. This is the year we leave college and go out into the world. As we attempt to live successful lives, we must remember that success cannot be attained at the expense of others.

Kingman Brewster, the President of Yale University, recently stated, "that perhaps in 1976, there is a chance to reach out to a more positive ideal. This ideal is to achieve a society of mutual helpfulness, a society in which all its members can make a constructive difference in each other's lives."

This has long been the policy at Bloomfield College. Many years ago, the administrators and faculty made this philosophy their own. With creative leadership, Bloomfield College has made a constructive difference in our lives. Here, because concerned individuals helped, we have acquired an education. We received the knowledge and the skills of our chosen fields. The philosophy of education at Bloomfield College has stressed the value of each individual's unique potential. This is without regard to age, sex, social standing, wealth or national origin. Through their example, the administrators and faculty at Bloomfield College have taught us the responsibility of developing the potential of others.

QUO VADIS? Where are you going? Will you leave and to where people starve for want of self fulfillment? I think we will choose to take with us the philosophy and ideals experienced at Bloomfield College. We will go into the mainstream of American society. We will create a place where you and I are nourished by the satisfaction of helping people achieve their potential. We will use our talents to add to the personal fulfillment of others. In so doing, we can achieve our own maximum potential while helping to bring this Utopian dream closer to reality.
